that the Center for Disease Control says, that says is true, that the the National Academy of Sciences that says is true, and that three of my colleagues say isn't true but they have no evidence to contravene that; if my sources are right, there's a 10 percent decrease in utilization. Ten percent of 35,000 is 3,500 kids. What I think evidence says that in this bill there are 3,500 kids now alive in Nebraska who will live longer if this bill passes. And if that chain of logic and information is wrong, tell me where it's wrong. Is MIT wrong? Is there a different study? Is the Center for Disease Control wrong? If there a better study? Is the National Academy of Sciences wrong? Is there some new data that replaces that? Is the fact that all the states that have done this have had decreases in consumption? Is there something wrong with that data we don't know about? Where's the information? Because if that isn't contested then what we know is that 3,500 kids now living in Nebraska will live longer if this bill passes. And what rationale justifies voting against that? The profits of a convenience store, a tobacco-selling operation on the border, the anger that there will...that will be there by the adult-smoking population? Does that justify...
